

A Great Property

A correspondent of Hayden Stone has the following to say regarding the Calumet and Arizona mine at Bisbee. An ore area a mile and a half long, one mile wide and underlain by bodies hundreds of feet in length and running up to seventy feet in width, developed to the 1500-foot level and with indications of good ore to a depth of 1800 feet—these are the dimensions that give some idea of the mineral resources of this great property. As yet only a small part of this acreage has been opened up, probably not over one-tenth has been thoroughly developed and not over one-fifth even prospected. As the ore seems to be making to the south, where the large undeveloped portion of the property lies, the possibilities of further large additions to the ore, and, therefore, of protracted life for the property, are excellent. At the present time the ore is being hoisted through three shafts, the Briggs, Hoatson and Oliver, the first named furnishing around 350 tons, the Hoatson 450 and the Oliver 700. Through the Oliver is hoisted the ore adjacent both to it and the Cole shaft. The Junction shaft is being concreted. When this is finished it will be the principal ore shaft. This shaft, by the way, has been sunk to a depth of 1800 feet, much the lowest in the property, and was in good ore at that point, but in it as yet there has been no development on that level. It is six years since the writer last visited this mine. At that time the values were almost altogether in the high-grade oxides and were mostly in the old Calumet and Arizona ground. These ores have been exhausted to a

The Vital Things

which we keep in mind and should be practiced in all good plumbing are: 1st, the best materials—not necessarily the most expensive, but the most durable. 2nd, we isolate all plumbing and concentrate as much as possible. We are experienced plumbers. Let us figure on your bill.

considerable degree, but they have been more than replaced in value by great bodies of high-grade sulphide ores lying mostly in S. & P. territory. These were opened up under tremendous difficulties and at great expense, one shaft was sunk against a head of 500 gallons of water per minute, equivalent to over 5,000,000 gallons a day. The labor and expense have, however been more than justified by the results: in fact, it has been the development of these sulphide ore bodies that has made it advisable to build a new smelter, as the old is not thoroughly adapted to the treatment of ore of this character. The size and value of these bodies have really to be seen to be appreciated. Adjacent to the Briggs shaft, for instance, on the 1300 level, is a body over 1100 feet long, in some places as wide as seventy feet and running all the way from four percent to thirty percent copper. This has been carried up nearly fifty feet and there is a good chance of picking it up on the level below. Tributary to the Junction shaft, though at present mined through the Hoatson, is what is probably the largest body of high grade copper ore in existence, a great open stope some 400 feet long and in places over forty feet wide, extends from above the 1400 level to the 1500. This is being mined by shrinkage stopes without the use of the timber. Probably the direct cost of mining this particular body, not including dead work, is not over 75 cents per ton. Here is the ideal condition, high grade ore that can be mined cheaply. In all probability the copper won from this ore is at the lowest cost of any that is produced. In a few days Calumet and Arizona will blow in its new smelter. This will increase its capacity about 25 per cent. Therefore, an annual production of at least 60,000,000 pounds may safely be counted on. At present the company's cost is probably around 7 cents a pound. Of course, the ore bodies as now developed cannot be expected to last a great many years, but as we have pointed out, there is large unexplored area and every indication of developing other large bodies, perhaps, of equal value. So that, as far as one can see into the future, a cost of eight cents can quite safely be taken as a basis for estimating profits. This would give earnings on 15 cent copper of over 11 per cent on the present price of the stock; altogether an excellent mining proposition conducted with great efficiency.
